Legend of a Resurrection Art

Today we are not even certain the location of the ancient domain of Matsuna. However, there remains a legend that has been passed on through the years containing an oral tradition on the art of resurrection. "Tempt a man into madness, and a soul returning from the netherworld will bring a corpse back to life." Today it is believed that traditions remaining in other parts of the world resemble such forbidden arts as resurrecting the dead. It is said that when a leech-like creature possesses a man, it can abruptly change his mild temperament to a bloodthirsty and dangerous one. It is also said that if this creature enters a dead body, it will cause the body to behave as if it were alive. But we no longer have the power to learn exactly what happened in Matsuna so long ago.

Sword of Raksasa

The date is the first year of the Tenmei era (1781). It is a time in which the peasants are suffering from a famine and politics are steeped in corruption.

One day, a troopship loaded with gold ingots to be presented to the Bakufu disappears off the coast of Matsuna. The Bakufu sends in the chief of its spy group, Shinjiro of Tsubame, in order to check up on the affairs in Matsuna. Shortly after Shinjiro goes in, the Bakufu loses all contact with him. Quite concerned with the situation, the Bakufu decides to send in three more spies.

In the meantime, Lin, the younger sister of Shinjiro, has been ordered to stay behind in Edo. However, the anxiety over her brother's safety is too much for her and, disobeying orders, she slips into Matsuna alone.

At about this time, a ronin, Hiba Kotaro, who has been journeying around the country to gain instruction from the great masters, is now on his way back to his homeland of Matsuna to visit his parent's gravesite.

The Main Characters

Hiba Kotaro, ronin

Age: 25, Height: 5' 10", Weight: 168lbs.

As a youth, Kotaro showed an extraordinary gift for using a sword. Although he was lazy and practiced very little, he never lost a match. He has many tremendous sword techniques that perhaps stem from his unbridled disposition, and he has managed to fuse techniques he learned at the dojo with breathing techniques he picked up in actual combat after leaving the clan.

Kotaro was born in the Matsuna Domain, which serves as the setting of this story. His parents died when he was a child. Later, Kotaro began to frequent the kendo dojo, where he refined his sword fighting skills along with the adopted son of the dojo, Koizumi Yukinosuke. The two soon distinguished themselves from the rest and were regarded as elite throughout Matsuna. Word came from the castle enthusiastically encouraging them to offer their services. However, Kotaro had no interest in such pursuits and ran away from Matsuna on the pretense that he was taking a journey to learn from the great masters of the country. Now, after several years have passed, Kotaro returns to visit his parents' gravesite.

strenuous training, brother and sister became members of the spy group. One day a troopship loaded with gold ingots and weapons to be presented to the Bakufu became lost somewhere off of Matsuna. In order to determine what happened to the troopship, the Bakufu sent Shinjiro, now the chief of the spy group, into Matsuna. But they lost all contact with him. He is nearly prepared to launch the revolt when he learns that a Bakufu spy has infiltrated his domain. He begins to take countermeasures against this new development.

Currently, he has converted the depths of an underground cave in Matsuna into a laboratory, where he is performing several mysterious experiments on corpses.

She was abandoned in this forest as an infant because of an unsightly birthmark on her face. Somehow she managed to survive, but still bears ill will against those who abandoned her. She found other women who had lived through similar circumstances and with them formed the Tengu Band. They have vowed to avenge themselves on the world. Those who enter Raven Forest: Beware!
